

Wallpaper*

JUNE 2012

*DESIGNINTERIORSFASHIONARTLIFESTYLE

UK £4.99
US $10.00
AUS $10.50
CAN $10.00
DKK 75.00
F €8.50
D €10.50
NL €8.50
I €9.00
J ¥1740
SGP $18.20
E €8.50
SEK 75.00
CHF 16.00
AED 45.00

GOT GAME?

Suit up. Dip your toe in.
Suck it and see, with the inaugural Wallympic*
sports edition

BEST ENHANCEMENT
How to run faster with
a huge rack, on your back

DAS BOOT-IQUE
The bespoke Austrian boots
every skier should own

DON'T GRIP, GRAPPLE!
Top tips for removing your ring rust

CASA SUTRA
Our detailed,
step-by-step guide
to indoor athletics.
(Free video available online)

HOW TO
join the Wet Set,
deconstruct string
theory and run
Arctic marathons

Kayaking in New York, pilates in Porto and the perfect pool for cruising
laps in Copenhagen

052 | IN RESIDENCE

SHINING EXAMPLE
The rooftop gym is the crowning glory of a private house and is clad in a screen that echoes the perforated wall compositions of north-eastern Brazil. These latticework brick façades date back to the 1920s, and became a defining characteristic of the newly created capital of Brasilia in the 1960s

JUNGLE GYM

In a leafy São Paulo neighbourhood, architect Marcio Kogan has worked out how to make working out a joy

PHOTOGRAPHY: NELSON KON WRITER: SCOTT MITCHEM

Close to Ibirapuera Park, in São Paulo's affluent Jardins neighbourhood, Cobogó House sits in a tranquil plot. Designed by celebrated local architect Marcio Kogan, the house features his signature long, low yet dramatic volumes and tastefully appointed rich, warm materials that add sensuality to what could have been a cold study in modernism. Carefully chosen furniture and artworks add another layer of luxury and sophistication, but it is the rooftop that steals the show. Each of Kogan's works has a distinguishing element, and Cobogó is no exception.

In a project like this, one might expect the top floor – and its incredible views – to be allocated to the master suite, or even a private office. In this case, the owner demanded to top the house with a private gym, a room typically tucked away in a basement. The result is a long, minimal box, enclosed in glass behind an intricate screen that filters the daylight, creating an elegant pattern that slowly evolves over the course of the day.

If the screen panels look familiar, they should. The pattern is a classic, designed for interior application by the Austrian-born, Connecticut-based sculptor Erwin Hauer in the 1950s, and it recently featured as a prominent part of the lobby at New York's Standard Hotel. Kogan spent more than a year with Hauer and his design partner Enrique Rosado to

EXERCISE CLASS

Top, the panels surrounding the rooftop gym diffuse light, creating elegant patterns that evolve through the day – and can be watched while resting on a lounge chair by Richard Schultz adapt the panels, originally fabricated in gypsum, for exposure to the elements. In the end, the pattern was achieved with pour-formed concrete, painted white. The screen recalls the cobogós (perforated wall compositions used as a brise-soleil) of north-eastern Brazil, hence the house's name. The ornate, hollowed bricks diffuse light while allowing ventilation, making them perfect for the climate.
Above, the space sports a luxurious bathing area with two saunas

The gym features everything from a state-of-the-art surround sound system to a luxurious bathing and changing area with two saunas. On the hi-tech, impact-resistant, vinyl-tiled floor sits a collection of Life Fitness machines, adding sporty finesse to an environment peppered with iconic pieces of furniture. A chaise longue by Richard Schultz or a 'Slow' chair by Ronan and Erwan Bouroullec ensure there will always be a stylish place to rest during a difficult training session. On the terrace, Paola Lenti's lounge chairs are best enjoyed when the work out is complete.

As private gyms go, it is hard to match this facility's lofty location and feel. The gym's centre-stage position and simple yet memorable light effect produce a training experience to remember – just enough to get anyone in shape for the nearest Brazilian beach. ✪
www.marciokogan.com.br

052 | IN RESIDENCE

SHINING EXAMPLE
The rooftop gym is the crowning glory of a private house and is clad in a screen that echoes the perforated wall compositions of north-eastern Brazil. These latticework brick facades date back to the 1920s, and became a defining characteristic of the newly created capital of Brasília in the 1960s.

JUNGLE GYM

In a leafy São Paulo neighbourhood, architect Marcio Kogan has worked out how to make working out a joy

PHOTOGRAPHY: NELSON KON WRITER: SCOTT MITCHEM

